Salisbury State College, Dr. Thomas E. Bellavance and the 1980s

Consolidation and Academic Growth

by Rick Schwartz

There is a story Tom Bellavance occasionally tells visitors when talk turns to Salisbury State College's public image.

While traveling to the school to assume the presidency, he struck up a conversation with a young man from Frederick, Maryland.

"What do you think of Salisbury State?" Dr. Bellavance asked.

"A jock school," came the reply.

One wonders if Dr. Bellavance has recovered from the shock.

During his first 16 months as president, the college returned to a traditional grading system, implemented mandatory academic advising and tightened its transfer credit policy. In that spirit, several departments stiffened their requirements.

In a recent interview, Dr. Bellavance talked about the changes. He also spoke about an impending tuition increase, upgrading the alumni office, SSC's relationship with the University of Maryland Eastern Shore and possible changes in the way the state administers its colleges. He discussed the school's future.

While the past decade was a time for expansion of Salisbury State's facilities and programs, the next few years will likely be a period of consolidation and academic growth, according to the President.

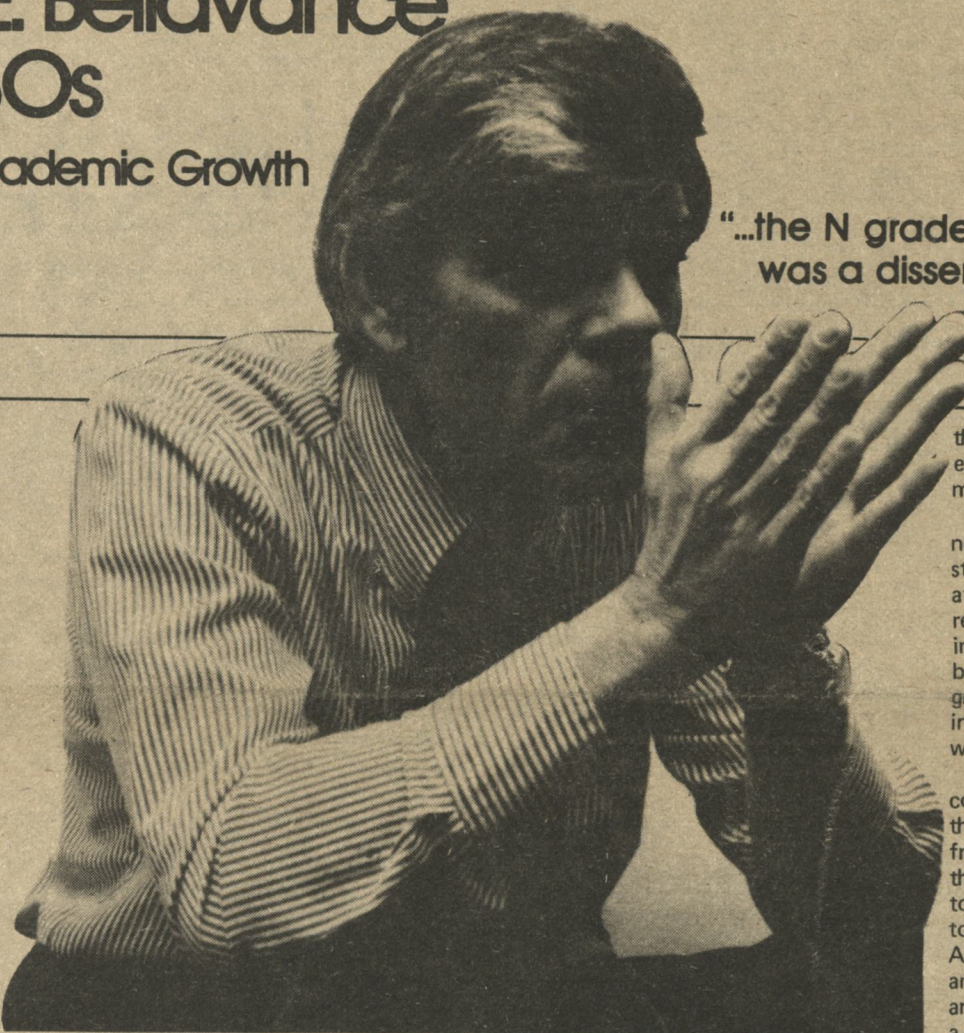

For the first time in years, the school is back to a traditional grading system. The N, which stood for no credit, has been replaced by the F.

"In my opinion," said Dr. Bellavance, "the N grade as it was being used was a disservice to the student. It did not let a student know how deeply in trouble he was."

There were other problems. Some graduate schools and employers regarded the N as an F. Some students took an N, which did not figure in grade averages, over a C or D, which did.

One who visits campus this month will probably see students carrying around spring registration forms and trying to get an advisor's signature. That approval is now mandatory, and nearly every faculty member serves as an academic advisor.

In the past, some students came to graduation and were shocked to find themselves a course or two short. Some students would sail through college without ever receiving academic advice.

"...the N grade as it was being used was a disservice to the student..."

Administrators say mandatory advising will eliminate the former problem and will help insure a well-rounded education.

"Students aren't forced to take their advisor's advice," said David Parker, acting associate academic dean. "But requiring a signature, students can't tell us advising was not there."

Parker said Dr. Bellavance didn't demand the scholastic changes.

"He made it easier for those changes to happen," Parker explained. "Academically, things were coming to a boil. Having a new president made people feel it was time to reevaluate what we had been doing for the past 10 years. His support promoted an atmosphere conducive to change."

Dr. Bellavance says no further academic changes are planned for next year. However, senior proficiency exams in math, reading and writing loom as future possibilities.

"If the faculty feels the work they are receiving from their seniors is inadequate," said Dr. Bellavance, "we will seriously consider comprehensive exams to further emphasize that learning is of prime importance on this campus."

The President denied the charge of some critics that he cares little for intercollegiate athletics. He stressed, however, the athletic competition should be kept in perspective.

"Intercollegiate athletics has a legitimate role on this campus as does theater, musical presentations or any extra-curricular activity that complements the learning process," he said.

"One aspect of sports that I'm nurturing is intramurals so that more students will have a chance to engage in athletic activities. Intercollegiate sports is reserved for a highly competent group of individuals and the rest of the student body ends up being spectators. There's a great deal of interest on campus for intramurals and I intend to support it wholeheartedly."

Dr. Bellavance believes that the colleges that survive the 1980s will be those that demand more academically from their students. His philosophy is that a well-rounded education is crucial to an individual being able to handle today's rapidly changing technology and America's diminishing sense of stability and community. Talk to him about this and he will tell you what he believes a college education should do.

"Education involves exposing an individual to his historical heritage," Dr. Bellavance said. "It means teaching toleration, it means teaching a student to be able to solve problems objectively, developing an ability to analyze, and perhaps, more importantly, to develop an ability to synthesize—to put pieces together in new and imaginative ways."

Trying to obtain such an education at Salisbury State will cost more next year.

"I suspect that we will come close to $1,000 tuition, about a $100 increase, and there's a good reason for that," Dr. Bellavance said. "What's happening is that state support has been decreasing over the years and to maintain quality the burden has been placed on outside sources."

State support dropped from 55 percent two years ago to 45 percent this year. The 1982-83 tuition rate is tentatively set at $960, up from $870. Annual room and board rates—not subsidized by the state—will likely go up also, according to the President.

The school has cut costs by carefully allocating supplies, cutting certain non-academic support areas and conserving energy. Besides tuition increases, the college has raised funds by increasing its profit-making continuing education, winter and summer school divisions.

Dr. Bellavance believes the alumni office can be a good source for fund-

"I am convinced that if we could get potential students on campus to see the facilities and speak to the faculty and students already here, they'll come."

Respiratory Therapy Degree Gains Approval

Salisbury State College is about to become the first public higher education institution in the state to offer a four-year baccalaureate program in respiratory therapy. Approval has been granted by the State Board for Higher Education.

The program, like SSC's Medical Technology, is a cooperative effort with Peninsula General Hospital Medical Center. The respiratory therapy student takes two years of preparatory work, involving general education requirements at Salisbury State. The final two years are centered at PGH with emphasis on critical care concepts in the third year and specializations in the hospital setting room as part of the medical care team in the final year.

Respiratory therapy is a highly skilled profession, emphasizing the monitoring and maintenance of the cardio-pulmonary functions.

The joint review committee on Respiratory Therapy Education specifies program requirements for certification and the Salisbury State College program has been designed to meet these requirements. Once students have completed the program of study they are eligible to sit for the registry examination offered by the National Board of Respiratory Therapists. Satisfactory achievement on the registry examination certifies the students as Registered Respiratory Therapists. They are then eligible for employment as therapists in every accredited hospital in the country.

Dr. Rodney Layton, chief of Pulmonary Care at Peninsula General Hospital Medical Center, and Dr. Cal Nagel, supervisor of the hospital unit, will share the responsibility of medical directory of the Respiratory Therapy Program. Both Drs. Layton and Nagel have been appointed adjunct clinical professors at Salisbury State College and will participate in the instruction of students in the program. Charles Boyer, supervisor of the pulmonary function unit at PGH has been designated clinical affiliate and will take an active part in directing the specialty care experiences for respiratory therapy students.

Formal program approval for the SSC Respiratory Therapy Program will be sought through the Joint Review Committee on Respiratory Therapy Education.

The evaluation process requires thorough documentation of program resources on both the SSC campus and at PGH Medical Center. It will include an on-site visit by officials representing the accrediting agency. That evaluation process is now under way and will continue for the next nine months, according to Dr. Peter Kernaghan, Respiratory Therapy region director at SSC.

The Respiratory Therapy Program at SSC will also provide upward career opportunity for respiratory therapy technicians who desire to advance to respiratory therapist status at the baccalaureate level.

Students may enter SSC as freshmen and complete the total four-year program in residence at the college. Students presently enrolled at SSC may pursue respiratory therapy as a career objective by completing the basic science course requirements for advanced standing.

For further information regarding the Respiratory Therapy Program contact Dr. Kernaghan.

Med Tech Program Earns Re-accreditation

Salisbury State College's Medical Technology Program leading to a Bachelor of Science degree, has been officially re-accredited by the National Accrediting Agency for Clinical Laboratory Sciences.

Salisbury State's four-year baccalaureate degree program includes three years of preparatory study at Salisbury State College. The fourth year is at PGH Medical Center, where the participant is trained in the actual laboratory setting before receiving the bachelor degree. The graduate is then ready for the national certification examination.

The re-accreditation, which occurs every five years, guarantees every Salisbury State graduate an opportunity to take the registry examination offered by the American Society of Clinical Pathologists. Passing this exam results in permanent certification in medical technology work and entitles the qualifier to practice the profession of medical technology at hospitals and laboratories throughout the country.

Dr. Peter Kernaghan, program director for Medical Technology, says that the five-year period for re-evaluation is a realistic feature of accreditation. "There are so many developments occurring each year that in the interest of maintaining an up-to-date program, it is necessary for a professional group to re-evaluate each educational unit."

The National Accrediting Agency for Clinical Laboratory Sciences is contracted by the American Medical Association to conduct accreditations. Results are forwarded to the AMA's Committee on Allied Health Education Accreditation.

Salisbury State College's re-accreditation began last April when an evaluation team arrived. Members included: Dr. Charles Ford, State University of New York at Buffalo; Dr. Lyman Fisher, University of Virginia, School of Medicine; and Mary Breen, University of Vermont, School of Health Professions.

The evaluation team examined all phases of SSC's program from the content of courses and qualifications of the instructional staff to the type of instrumentation and kinds of tests performed in the Peninsula General Hospital Medical Center laboratory.

Medical technologists are highly skilled professional scientists who exercise independent judgment and personal responsibility in performing chemical, microscopic, bacteriological and hematological tests in the diagnosis and cure of disease.

MBA Moves One Step Closer

Salisbury State College's plans to establish the first Master of Business Administration program on the lower Eastern Shore is nearing fulfillment.

The Program and Curriculum Committee of the State Board for Higher Education considered the plan for the program at its regular meeting in December and the entire Board is expected to act on the proposal at its February meeting.

Pending the State Board for Higher Education approval, Salisbury State College plans to initiate its MBA program in September, 1982, according to Dr. Jerome Lake, chairman of the Business Administration and Economics Department, and Dr. Patrick Butler, the designated associated chairman for graduated studies.

Assignment of the MBA program, leading to a degree at Salisbury State College, was one of a number of different programs agreed upon in the recent Long-Range Collaborative Academic Plan between Salisbury State College and University of Maryland Eastern Shore.

Dr. Butler indicated that a number of steps led up to the current Board consideration.

"First our Business Administration Department had to show the capability that we could provide a program with our current resources," Dr. Butler said. "We did not want to take any resources away from our undergraduate program," he added.

Dr. Butler indicated that following this initial consideration the Department began a self-study which culminated in the MBA program proposal. This was submitted to the Board of Trustees of the State Universities and Colleges.

Approval by the Board of Trustees was granted and they submitted the proposal to the State Board last summer.

The Program and Curriculum Committee recently came to Salisbury State College as a group to review the proposal. These State Board members were Dr. Joseph T. Durham, Dr. Henry Volner and Dr. Lewis Cockrill.

Also a consultant, Dr. Michael Pohlen, chairman of the Business Administration Department at University of Delaware, attended this review as a consultant to the State Board Program and Curriculum Committee. He submitted a favorable report in early November.

Both Drs. Lake and Butler will attend the committee meeting and general meeting of the State Board for Higher Education when approval is considered.

The MBA will be a 30-semester hour graduate professional degree program in business administration, designed to develop analytical and professional abilities in management. It will present a broad perspective of the management process, environment of management and the functional management areas of accounting finance and marketing.

Both full-time and part-time students will be admitted into the program. Full-time students will normally complete degree requirements in three semesters, while part-time students will complete work in five semesters.

The program will be scheduled to encourage participation of part-time students, particularly those active in management who desire a solid basis for future professional growth.

Alumni Directories Available

The Salisbury State College Alumni Office has worked out a contingent arrangement with Taylor Publishing Company of Dallas, Texas to provide alumni directories for graduates of SSC. These directories (softbound, 6 x 9 inches, approximately 200 pages) will be indexed geographically, alphabetically and by class.

There is, however, one important stipulation in the contract with Taylor Publishing Company. Since the SSC Alumni Association does not have the funds to purchase a minimum shipment (2,000 copies for $5,965), the printing firm has agreed to allow the Association to pre-sell the directories through the SSC Alumni News with a December 15, 1982 deadline. If the Alumni Association has not sold enough directories, at $5 each, to cover expenses, the contract will be voided.

To order your SSC Alumni Directory, delivered by the spring of 1983, fill out the form below and return it with your check, payable to the Salisbury State College Alumni Association. Again, if we have not pre-sold enough directories to cover the printing charge and postage, the Alumni Association will be forced to void our contract with Taylor Publishing Co.

Homecoming Review by Louise Marshall, Corresponding Secretary

Homecoming was sparsely attended on November 7, 1981 at Salisbury State. That was unfortunate, because there was a good program, many changes afoot on campus worthy of note and Dr. Bellavance attending and addressing the Alumni with his plans for the college.

The Class of 1931 had a great 50th Anniversary celebration that was very well attended—26 (or more), many of whom attended both an off-campus luncheon they had planned as well as the evening alumni dinner. The whole group was at the anniversary tea held in the Social Room and they donated a drum table made by local cabinet maker Teubner Hopkins.

Other classes having a good turnout were the classes of '73, '75, '76, '77, '78 and '80. Twenty-five classes had no one attending the Homecoming activities. We, of the executive committee, are disheartened by this lack of interest.

So what is the answer? The class of 1931 success is attributed to an on-the-ball class agent, Margaret Laws Engle, and her committee who started three years ahead corresponding with class members planning a program for the group when they came to Homecoming '81.

Would you return if your class or group planned a function that allowed you to meet and catch up at Homecoming? It can be done with a couple of interested people who could write a letter (which the college will print and mail for you) telling of the planned gathering. Those responding would also spread the word and the turnout could be wonderful and worth a trip back to the SSC campus. Salisbury State is most accommodating in providing room and facilities for such groups; or you may wish to have an off-campus event you could plan yourselves.

You are the personal touch needed to make Homecoming a success.

.....from the desk of the Alumni President

Past, present, future. Let's examine each of these for a bit with respect to SSC and particularly the Alumni Association.

As I write this, at the beginning of December, our Alumni Weekend is a thing of the past. Some observations might be in order. Even though we didn't have as many of our Alumni back as we might have desired, we realize this is the penalty of our fast-paced world with its many divisive forces. (Incidentally we were able to tally about 150 Alumni Association members.) Those who did come seemed to enjoy themselves and there were many meaningful personal reunions.

It was a personal enjoyment to my wife and me as we got together with some of our friends in the Class of 1941, some of whom we had not seen since our graduation in June of that year. Well we remember 1941 as the lull before the storm brought about by the war in Europe and December 7th at Pearl Harbor. For us, renewing acquaintances with these friends of a long past day was well worth the weekend.

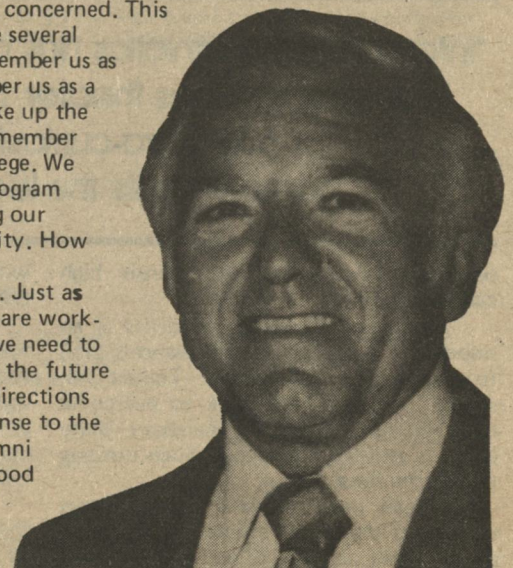

At the business meeting a number of ideas were broached by those in attendance and will be pursued by your Executive Committee as a part of our future considerations for Alumni Activities. We must find some way of involving more in our annual business meeting, and this might be pursued with some of the suggestions made.

As to the present, the Executive Committee is in the process of analyzing our Alumni Weekends for the purpose of determining how they might be more meaningful to all parties concerned. This involves a real problem because we have several Alumni sub-groups: (1) those who remember us as a normal school; (2) those who remember us as a teachers college; and (3) those who make up the bulk of the Alumni Association who remember us as a growing, ever-changing state college. We need to concern ourselves with some program which will be a cohesive force in uniting our total Alumni structure into a useful entity. How do we do this?

This leads us logically to the future. Just as Dr. Bellavance and his faculty and staff are working out new directions for the college, we need to develop a structure which will help face the future needs of our association. One of these directions always involves finances and your response to the Annual Gift Program, according to Alumni Coordinator Gains Hawkins, has been good to this point. If the college is successful in securing a full-time fund-raiser perhaps the Alumni Association might plug into this program in a very meaningful manner.

The future for the college from my perspective as a student, Alumni member, public school principal, faculty member and finally as a retired faculty member, seems to point to Salisbury State as an increasing influence educationally on the Eastern Shore and throughout the state. I believe the college and certainly we of the Alumni Association have a challenge to meet. Together we can do it.

S. Goldsborough Tyler

Margaret Laws Engle, 1931 class agent, presents SSC Alumni Association President Goldy Tyler with check for $405.91 targeted for the alumni's scholarship fund. The presentation was made at the Anniversary Tea, honoring the Class of 1931, at Homecoming.

Class of '31 Presents Table

The table was made by Teubner Hopkins, a local cabinet maker from Princess Anne.

The Class of 1931 also presented the college with a Chinese vase filled with silk flowers arranged by class member Wanda V. Cooper.

Members of the Class of 1931 Anniversary Committee were: Wanda Vickers Cooper; Julia Covington Ford; Almona Keyser Hearne; Gladys Brohawn Lloyd; Mabel Willis McAllister; Florence Wimbrow Parsons; Esther Collins Riggin; Kathryn Harrison Spencer; and Margaret Laws Engle, class agent.

Homecoming 1981

raising and hopes to hire a full-time director. He plans to turn the office into a self-supporting foundation so that money contributed by alumni and local businesses will not revert back to the state at the end of the fiscal year.

According to Dr. Bellavance, the upgraded office would also help get alumni on campus, encourage them to serve on advisory boards, and "make them feel an ongoing part of the operation." In addition, the office would have of state colleges."

Intensified recruiting seems to be yielding dividends. Administrators still gloat over this fall's near record freshmen enrollment and a 20-point increase in their SAT averages.

To make the school more relevant to students, Dr. Bellavance has targeted career planning placement and student-faculty relations as priority areas. To give students a broader range of curriculum, he espouses Salisbury State's arrangement

"Intercollegiate athletics has a legitimate role on this campus as does theater, musical presentations or any extra-curricular activity that complements the learning process."

organize alumni to help recruit high caliber students.

Attracting top-notch students is an important part of Dr. Bellavance's plan for upgrading scholastics. To do so, school recruiters will have to overcome negative stereotypes of Salisbury State being a second-rate school. Such notions puzzle the President.

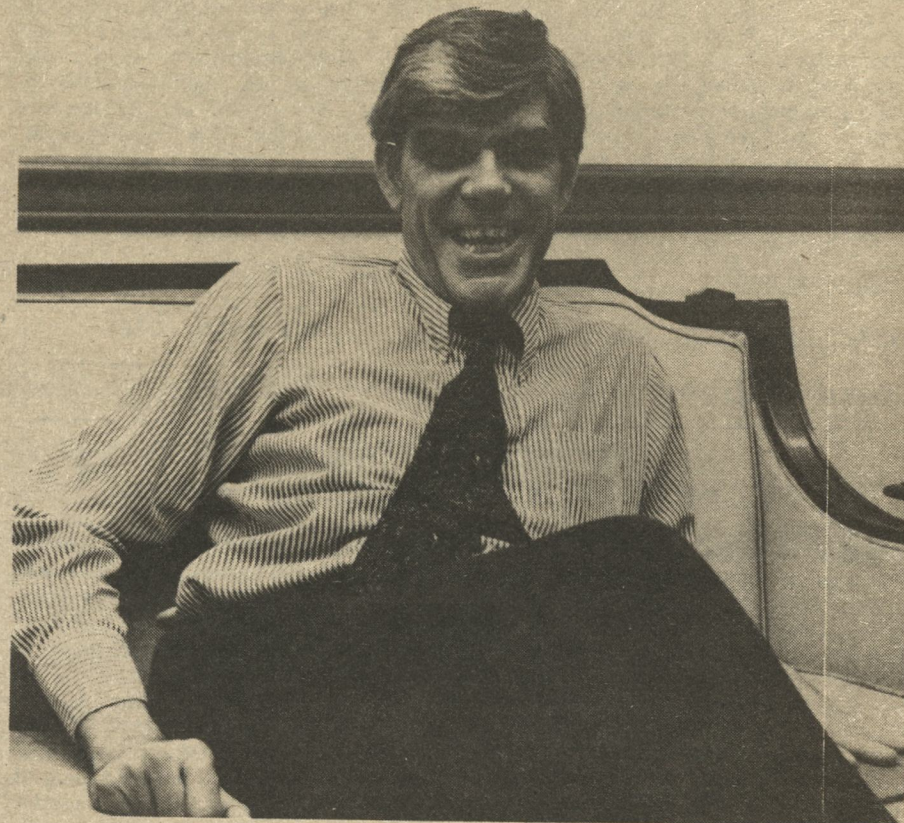

"I can never say this enough. I am convinced that if we could get potential students on campus to see the facilities and speak to the faculty and students already here, they'll come," said Dr. Bellavance. "It's really a problem of educating the public to what we have and getting through the stereotype people with the University of Maryland Eastern Shore.

Under that agreement, both schools will retain some of the same programs, share some and develop individual specialties. For example, a business major at SSC can take hotel-motel management courses at UMES. An agriculture major at UMES can take art courses at SSC.

The set-up has come under fire from those who would like the schools merged. Dr. Bellavance claims a powerful ally in Governor Harry Hughes who visited Salisbury State in September.

"Hughes was extremely complimentary of the arrangement," said Dr. Bellavance. "He supports it 100 percent.

He considers it a tremendous breakthrough as we attempt to take two separate institutions and bring them together to see how they can best serve students rather than have them tear each other apart."

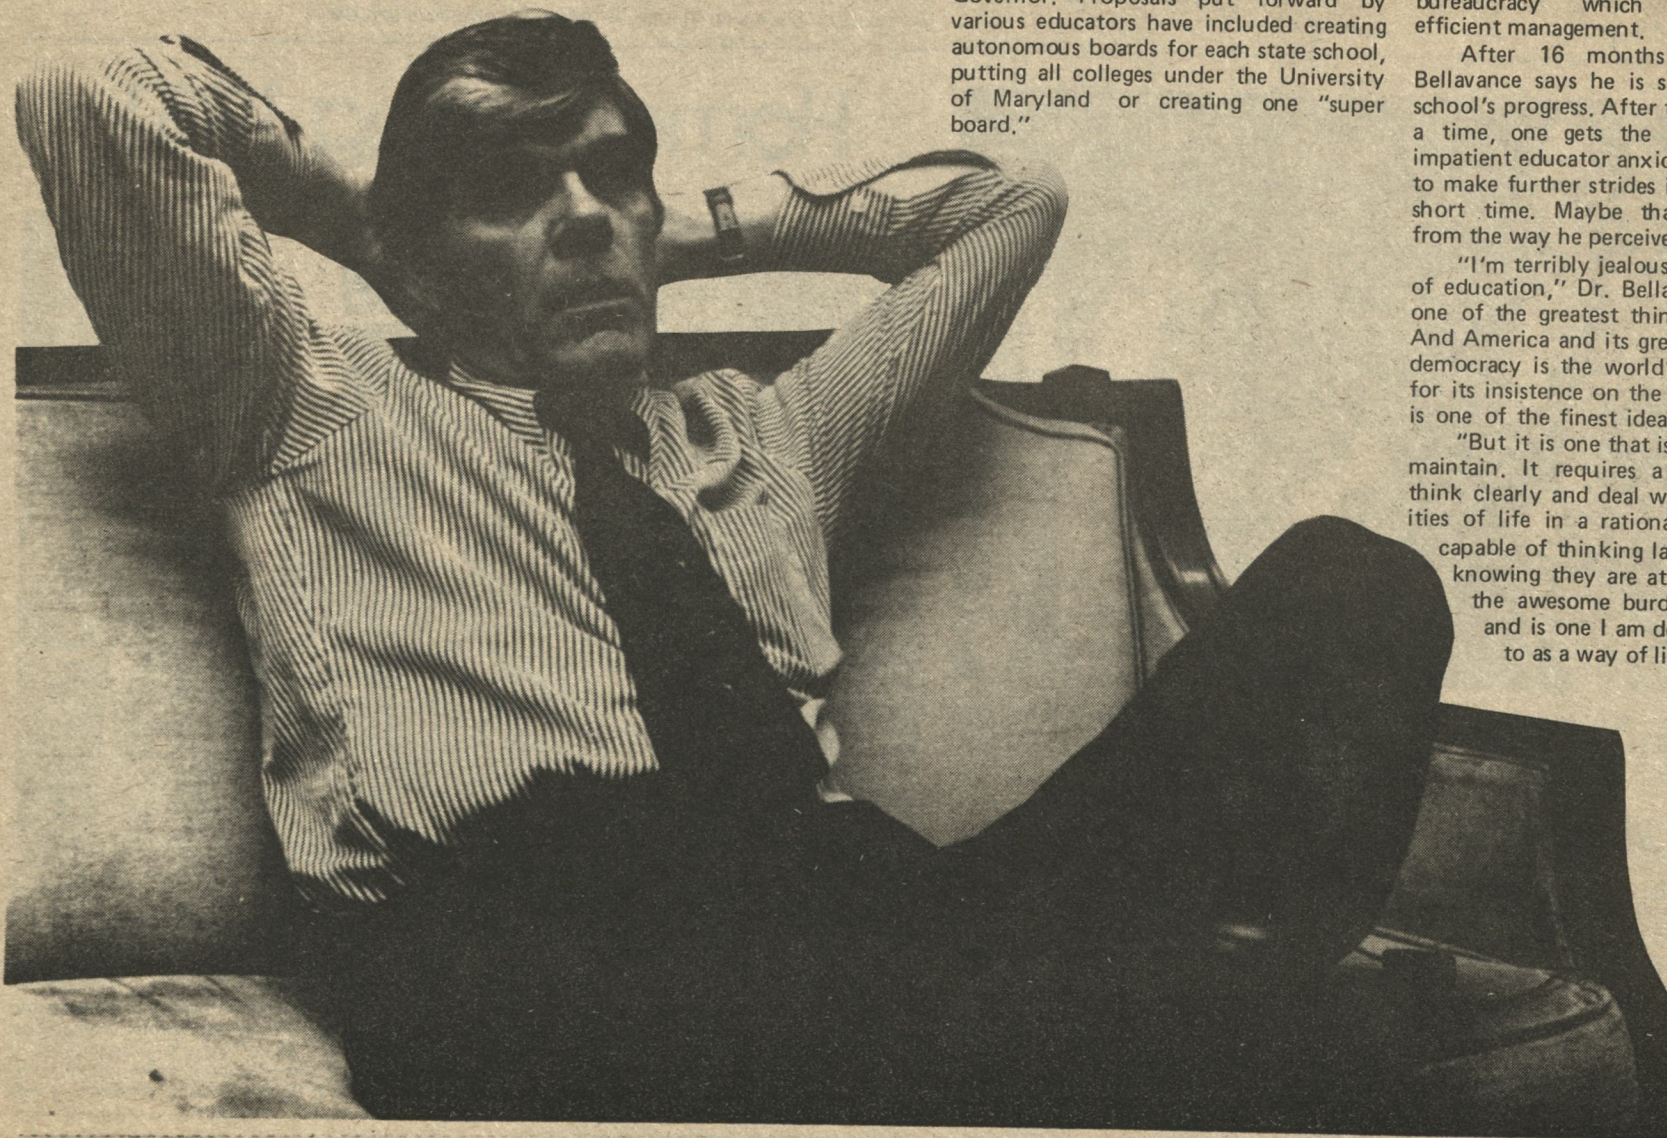

Cooperation between all state colleges may be on the mind of the Governor. Proposals put forward by various educators have included creating autonomous boards for each state school, putting all colleges under the University of Maryland or creating one "super board."

There are merits to all those plans, says Dr. Bellavance, but he predicts Governor Hughes will choose the latter. Such a board would replace the current multiboard system and, Dr. Bellavance hopes, cut down on the competition among state schools for funds. Also, he expects it will do away with layers of bureaucracy which now obstruct efficient management.

After 16 months in office, Dr. Bellavance says he is satisfied with the school's progress. After talking to him for a time, one gets the feeling he is an impatient educator anxious for the school to make further strides in academics in a short time. Maybe that feeling comes from the way he perceives his job.

"I'm terribly jealous about the worth of education," Dr. Bellavance said. "It's one of the greatest things in the world. And America and its great experiment in democracy is the world's last best hope, for its insistence on the individual worth is one of the finest ideals of civilization.

"But it is one that is very difficult to maintain. It requires a people able to think clearly and deal with the complexities of life in a rational way—a people capable of thinking large thoughts and knowing they are attainable. This is the awesome burden of education and is one I am deeply committed to as a way of life."

'81-'82 Annual Giving Nears $5,000 Figure

Contributions from over 300 Salisbury State College alumni have pushed the 1981-82 Annual Giving Drive near the $5,000 mark. As of January 5, $4,939.91 had been received for the drive begun the first week in November.

Much of the money donated has been targeted for the Alumni Association's Scholarship Fund as outlined by Dr. S. Goldsborough Tyler, association president, in the Annual Giving information packet all alumni should have received.

Despite that healthy start, the SSC Alumni Association still needs to at least double that $5,000 figure before a four-year scholarship can be issued.

For more information on how to make your contribution, please contact the SSC Alumni Association Coordinator, Gains Hawkins, at (301) 546-3261, ext. 210.

Below is a complete list of contributors to the 1981-82 Annual Giving Drive as of January 5.

James R. Thrash, director of SSC's Blackwell Library, accepts check for $571.75 from Alumni Association treasurer Joanne Keys for purchase of 35 Civil War books for the library's LesCallette Room. Contributions from SSC alumni targeted for the LesCallette Room financed the purchases.

McGlinchey Named New Grid Coach

Michael A. McGlinchey, an assistant coach for the past 10 years, was appointed head football coach at Salisbury State College by SSC Athletic Director Deane Deshon. The announcement was made at a press conference at the college.

"It's a tremendous challenge and a wonderful opportunity," said an elated McGlinchey, a physical education instructor at the college. "I can't wait to start."

McGlinchey, 36, who has coached football at SSC since the inception of the sport here in 1972, is the third Sea Gull head coach, succeeding G. William Yeagle, who resigned in November.

"We picked the right man," said Deshon. "I think he will do an outstanding job."

SSC President Thomas Bellavance said, "We were extremely fortunate that Mike was interested in the position and willing to step in as head coach. He's a known quantity here on campus and that means a record of dedication, unwavering spirit, commitment to educating the whole person and an unquestionable ability in the area of teaching."

McGlinchey is a graduate of the University of Delaware (1967) where he played football, baseball and wrestled and was selected the school's "Athlete of the Year" and "Outstanding Wrestler" in 1967.

Following graduation from Delaware, he entered the service and won both the Fifth Army and U.S. European Command 190 pound wrestling titles. He also was head wrestling coach for Fifth Army.

After leaving the service, McGlinchey taught and coached at Elkton (Md.) High School for two years. He was the defensive coordinator for the Elkton football team, assistant baseball coach and started the school's wrestling program.

He returned to the University of Delaware in 1971 and earned his M. Ed. in administration in 1972. He also served as defensive secondary coach for the freshman football team, assistant coach for the Blue Hen wrestling squad and assistant baseball coach.

He joined Head Coach Richard N. Yobst's staff at Salisbury State in the fall of '72 for the initial Sea Gull football campaign, coaching the defensive secondary.

McGlinchey was the SSC defensive coordinator for the next eight years. He stepped up to assistant head coach last year and served as the offensive coordinator.

McGlinchey started the SSC varsity wrestling program in the fall of 1972 and over the next nine years built it into one of the most successful NCAA Division III programs in the country, twice finishing third in the nation and last year earning a fifth place finish. Additionally, McGlinchey has coached four national champions, two of whom repeated, and eight all-Americans.

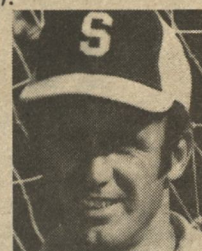

McGlinchey is married to Marylane McBurney and they have two children, Patrick, 9, and Michael, 4.

In the 10 years Salisbury State has fielded football teams, the school has produced a 54-38-2 record. Yobst compiled a 39-25-1 mark in seven years while Yeagle was 15-13-1 in his three seasons.

Burroughs Coach-Of-Year

Dean Burroughs, Salisbury State College's tennis mentor, was recently named "Coach of the Year" by the Middle Atlantic Professional Tennis Association (MAPTA).

A 16 year member of the United States Professional Tennis Association (USPTA), Burroughs is currently the Maryland State representative as well as the vice-president for schools and colleges in the MAPTA.

Dean Burroughs

Out of the nine sections of the USPTA, the Mid-Atlantic region sports one of the leading tennis film libraries. Thanks to Dean Burroughs, this treasure house of instructional and entertaining tennis films is stored at SSC's Blackwell Library. The selection of 30 films range from U. S. Open highlights to pointers from Vic Braden.

As the men's coach for the past eight years at SSC, Burroughs has compiled a respectable 117-44 record. That includes competing in six of the last eight national tournaments, producing two All-Americans and three conference championships.

Burroughs has also coached the SSC women to a seven year cumulative record of 42-27.

In the summers, Burroughs devotes his energies to directing the SSC Tennis Center. Dedicated to promoting tennis locally, the center offers camps, leagues, tournaments and clinics. Not too many centers can boast of having such a knowledgeable professional as its leader.

People can often catch Burroughs with not only a racquet by his side but a pen in his hand. He writes a bi-monthly article for Tennis Life Magazine called Coaches Angle.

After spending a day as associate professor in the department of physical education and health at SSC, Burroughs goes home to relax with his wife and four children.

As one can see, on and off the courts, Burroughs sets exemplary behavior for the highly lauded title of "Coach of the Year."
